

Castle Hill Water Resource Recovery Facility

May 2026

We're upgrading the Castle Hill Water Resource Recovery Facility (WRRF), which is part of Sydney Water's Northwest Treatment Hub, increasing treatment capacity to support housing growth and protect local waterways.

What's happening now

We're moving into the next stage of the Castle Hill WRRF upgrade.

Construction is expected to finish in late-2026 with overall completion targeted for April 2027.

From around August, we'll start commissioning, bringing upgraded systems online and checking performance. This will continue through to March 2027, followed by around three months of effluent quality testing.

What we've done so far

Since December 2025, we've completed key installation works, including underground pipework, mechanical installation and electrical installation.

Proposed extension to Saturday work hours

To help keep the project on schedule, we're proposing to extend our Saturday working hours from 1pm to 5pm until November 2026 for some low-impact activities. Noisier work will be scheduled during standard hours, where possible.

Please provide us with any feedback to the proposed Saturday hours extension by Friday 15 May 2026 via email to northwesttreatmenthub@sydneywater.com.au

What you may notice in 2026

Until mid-2026, you may continue to notice work vehicles and ongoing on-site activity as we complete construction.

Most work will be within the existing facility to reduce local impacts. Crews are also reminded about respectful parking.

Walking track access

For safety, the walking track on the western side of the site and surrounding fire trails remains temporarily closed while work continues.

We aim to remove detours and reinstate the walking track by December 2026.

High Voltage line works

High Voltage line work in surrounding streets is expected to continue between April and June 2026, mostly on:

- Victoria Avenue
- Showground Road
- Gilbert Road
